

Abstract

A computer-implemented method of performing data mining on an individual basis is described. The method includes monitoring an individual's use patterns and creating an individual data profile based on analysis of the monitoring operation. Tasks are then automatically performed in accordance with an individual's request and based on the individual data profile.